Headlines

Gold Prices Drop As Markets Focus On Russia's Possible Syria Strike Retaliation

- Gold began to decline as soon as Asian markets opened early on Monday, with traders waiting for possible retaliatory moves from Russia after U.S., France, and Britain launched air strikes on Syria over the weekend.
- One hundred and five missiles targeted alleged chemical weapons facilities in Syria. The American, French, and British military action was in response to a chemical attack in the Syrian city of Douma on April 7.
- The western countries said Assad was to be blamed for the poisonous gas attack, which killed dozens of people. But, the Syrian government, as well as its ally Russia, have denied any involvement.
- Analysts said that the first round of strikes on Syria was priced in last week, which is why gold prices might not rally in reaction to the move, but added that any additional strikes could significantly move the precious metal.
- Gold has risen more than 3 percent this year, buoyed by international trade and geopolitical disputes and volatility in equities, but the metal has yet to emerge from a tight trading range in the face of an expectation for rising U.S. interest rates, traders say.
- Speculators raised their net long positions in COMEX gold contracts by 363 contracts to 138,212 contracts in the week to April 10, U.S. Commodity Futures Trading Commission (CFTC) data showed on Friday.

Oil prices drop after last week's big gains, as Syria-risk fatigue sets in

- Oil prices fell Monday, reversing a fraction of last week's pop to a near 3 1/2-year high, as investors took weekend airstrikes on Syria in their stride.
- A barrage of American, French and British missiles launched on Saturday destroyed much of Syria's chemical-weapons capabilities, but left President Bashar al-Assad's conventional military intact, according to U.S. Defense Department officials.
- Investors were taking profits on Monday, on the expectation that neither Russia nor Iran, another Assad supporter, would retaliate to the strikes, which were limited to the chemical-weapons facilities.
- On Friday, the IEA indicated that global oil stockpiles are dwindling and approaching the five-year average the Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries is targeting.
- Baker Hughes BHGE, +1.37% on Friday reported that the number of active domestic oil rigs edged up by seven this week. The figure, which offers a peek at U.S. oil activity, was up for a second straight week.

EUR/USD within a tight range ahead of US data, around 1.2330

- The single currency is alternating gains with losses vs. the greenback at the beginning of the week, taking EUR/USD to the 1.2330 region ahead of the opening bell in Euroland.
- Spot is looking to stabilize in the lower bound of the recent range following the rejection from last week's peaks in the boundaries of 1.2400 the figure, all amidst a steady buck and calm risk appetite trends.
- In fact, both geopolitical risks and the potential US-China trade war appears alleviated, as President Trump seems to have moderated his rhetoric, lending some extra oxygen to the risk-associated complex.
- In the data space, US Retail Sales for the month of March will be the salient publication along with speeches by Dallas Fed R.Kaplan (non voter, hawkish), Minneapolis Fed N.Kahkari (non voter, dovish) and Atlanta Fed R.Bostic (voter, centrist).

Crude oil price opens today's trading with clear bearish bias to test the first key support at 66.70, noticing that stochastic gets rid of its negative momentum to approach the oversold areas, to provide positive motive that we are waiting to assist to push the price to rise again, especially that the EMA50 provides continuous positive support to the price. Therefore, we will continue to suggest the overall bullish trend conditioned by the price stability above 66.30, as breaking this level will push the price to start bearish correction on the intraday basis before turning back to rise again, noting that our next main target is located at 70.00.
